Campaign Overview

This assessment presents a proposed International Women's Day launch for Christy Ng. The new product is the Ambition Mini Tote, supported by the campaign message Carry Your Ambition. It connects a detachable goal card with recognising women's ambitions in education, work and creative life.

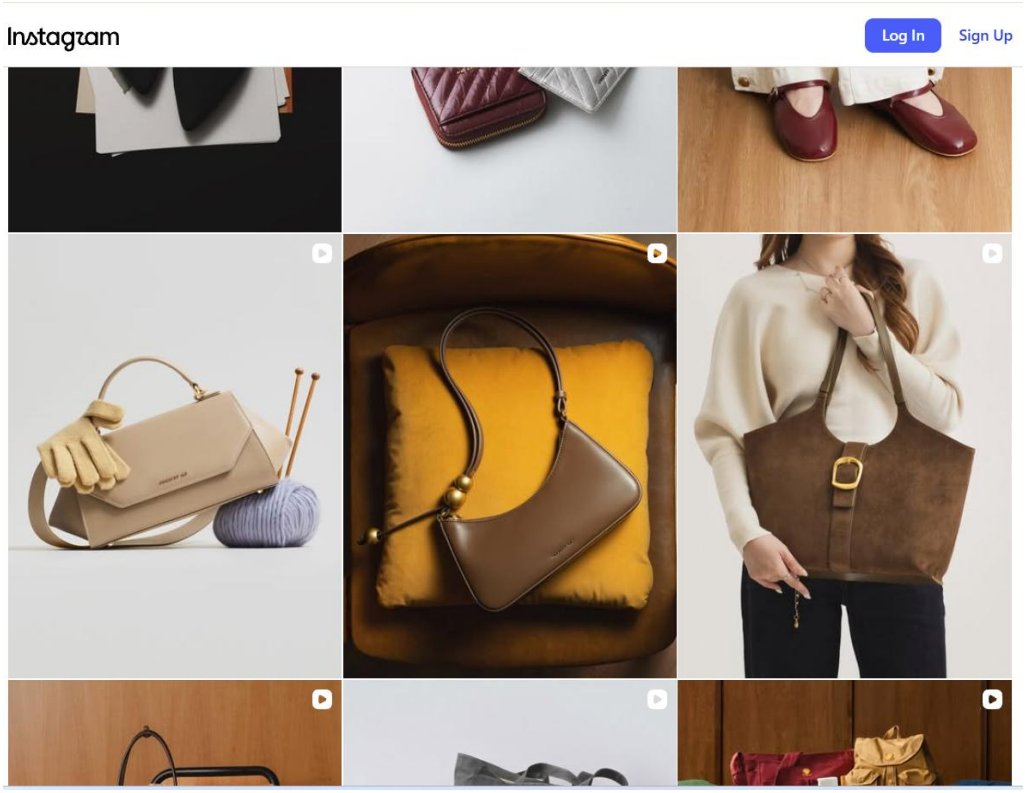

The assessment distinguishes three types of material: company screenshots supplied as research evidence; AI-generated campaign starting concepts; and screenshots showing the designs in Adobe Photoshop. The Ambition Mini Tote is a proposed product, not an existing Christy Ng item or an approved company launch. The following table summarises the campaign direction used throughout Sections A and B.

Campaign element	Selected approach
Organisation	Christy Ng
Proposed new product	Ambition Mini Tote with a detachable cardholder and removable goal card
Celebration	International Women's Day, 8 March
Slogan	Carry Your Ambition
Supporting message	Your goals. Your style. Your next step.
Primary audience	Women aged 18–35 in Malaysia, especially university students and young working adults
Main action	Share your next step through an Instagram Story reply or #CarryYourAmbition
Visual identity	Cream, black and restrained gold; serif headlines and simple supporting text

SECTION A — Question 1(a)

Present three pieces of evidence. Explain what the organisation does, where or how each piece was collected, what it is used for, and its visual or multimedia elements.

Evidence 1: Instagram product grid

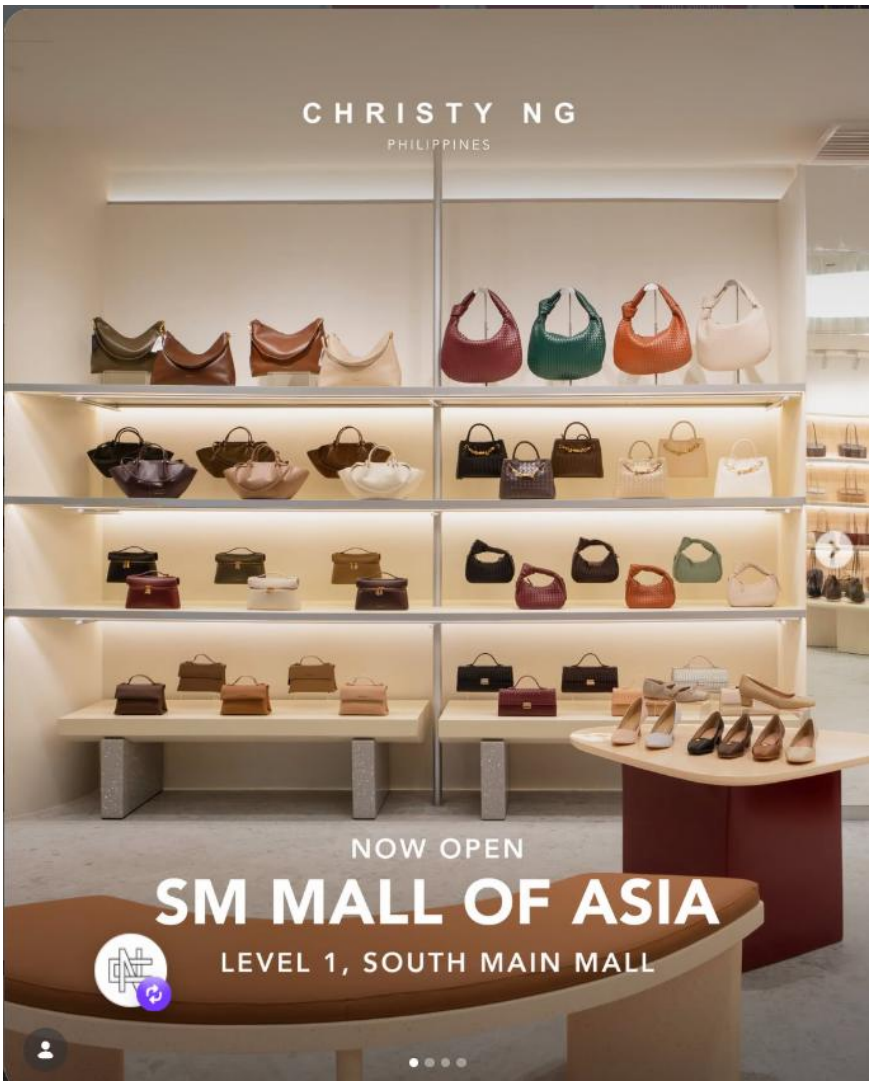

Christy Ng's supplied materials show fashion products including bags, shoes and accessories. This screenshot was collected from an Instagram grid viewed through a browser. It shows individual product photographs, styled scenes and a person carrying a bag. Warm browns, cream backgrounds and close views of the products create a coordinated appearance.

The material introduces products and helps viewers imagine how accessories may fit different outfits. Play symbols indicate video or Reel content, but this still screenshot does not demonstrate motion or sound. The useful campaign references are the clear product focus, neutral backgrounds and combination of product and lifestyle presentation.

Source record: Instagram; exact profile and post links were not provided. These should be added from the original account rather than guessed. This analysis concerns the visible screenshot only.

Question 1(a) — Evidence 2

Evidence 2 Store opening at SM Mall of Asia

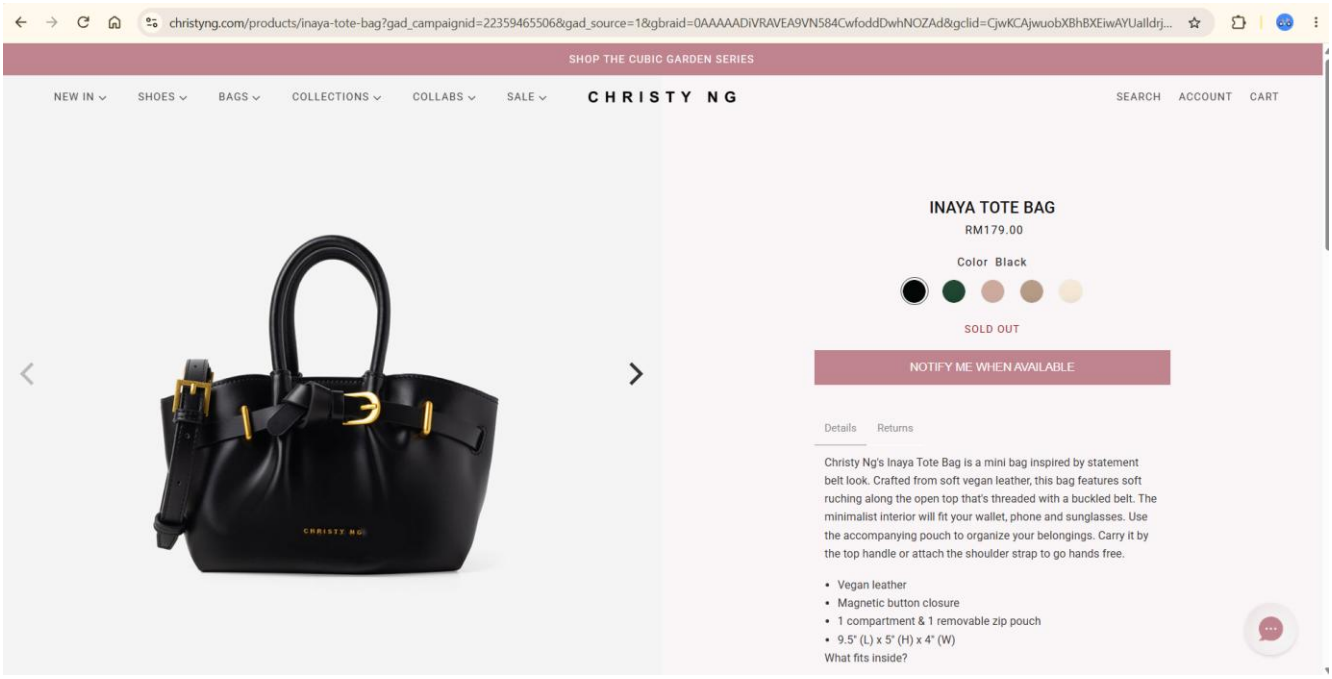

This Instagram promotional image displays CHRISTY NG PHILIPPINES and announces a store at SM Mall of Asia, Level 1, South Main Mall. It uses a photograph of illuminated shelves containing handbags, with footwear displayed in the foreground. White uppercase text communicates the opening and location clearly.

The purpose is to build awareness and help customers locate the store. Warm lighting and organised displays support an elegant appearance. The proposed campaign adopts the clear hierarchy and restrained colours, while using its own message and action. The image concerns a Philippines location and does not establish a Malaysian campaign venue.

Source record: Instagram store-opening image; exact account and post URL were not supplied. No publication date or current opening status is inferred.

Question 1(a) — Evidence 3

Evidence 3 Inaya Tote Bag product page

This is a product page rather than the website homepage. The screenshot contains a large black bag photograph, the CHRISTY NG wordmark, navigation, colour choices, a description and purchasing information. The selected black option is marked Sold Out and the displayed price is RM179. These are captured details, not verified current stock or pricing.

The page describes the existing Inaya as a mini bag with a shoulder strap and removable pouch. Its black surface and gold-coloured hardware provide a visual reference for the proposed product. Its simple background and readable information show how photography and text can support customer understanding.

The screenshot supports analysis of the existing product only. The proposed Ambition Mini Tote has a different clasp and a detachable cardholder with a goal card. The Inaya price, material description, dimensions and stock status must not be transferred to the new concept.

Evidence based design direction

Together, Figures 1–3 support a handbag campaign with neutral colours, prominent product images and concise messages. They do not provide verified customer demographics, sales results or approval of the proposed launch. Audience selection and performance targets in this assessment are campaign planning decisions.

Question 1(b)

Select one product or service to be launched and one international celebration or awareness day. Explain their connection and suitability for the organisation and audience, using the evidence in Question 1(a).

The Ambition Mini Tote

The proposed new product is the Ambition Mini Tote: a compact black tote with top handles, a detachable shoulder strap, and a curved gold-coloured clasp. Its distinctive additions are a matching detachable cardholder and a removable card headed My Next Step. The card invites the user to write a goal. These are proposed design features, not tested manufacturing specifications.

International Women's Day on 8 March provides a meaningful connection through recognition of women's ambitions. The campaign encourages goals in study, work, and creative life, alongside encouragement for others. Buying a bag is not presented as a solution to inequality. The goal card gives the message a practical point of participation beyond a greeting.

The concept suits the supplied brand evidence because handbags, neutral tones, and gold-coloured details are visible in the existing communication. The proposed audience is women aged 18–35 in Malaysia who are interested in accessories. Manufacturing, pricing and commercial feasibility would require company review before any real launch.

Question 2(a)

State the objective and target audience. Explain what the organisation wants to achieve and what action it wants the audience to take.

Objective and target audience

The campaign objective is to introduce the proposed Ambition Mini Tote and build recognition of Carry Your Ambition during four weeks leading up to International Women's Day. It aims to communicate the product's distinguishing cardholder and goal card, encourage voluntary participation, and assess interest before a possible company-approved launch.

The primary audience is women aged 18–35 in Malaysia, particularly university students and young working adults interested in fashion accessories. A secondary audience is people considering a gift for someone pursuing a personal goal. This audience is proposed for the campaign and is not presented as a verified company customer profile.

Message and intended action

The slogan is Carry Your Ambition. The supporting message is Your goals. Your style. Your next step. The key idea is that personal ambitions deserve recognition and encouragement. The proposed goal card turns that idea into a simple action: write a next step and keep a reminder close.

The main call to action is Share your next step. Related wording such as Share your ambition serves the same action. Viewers can reply to the Instagram Story or share a goal using #CarryYourAmbition. Participation is optional and does not require buying the product. No purchase link is shown because the product is a proposal.

Channels and campaign sequence

Stage	Activity and purpose
Week 1	Introduce the campaign through the poster and Instagram feed design. Establish the product name and slogan.
Week 2	Use the Story question to invite goals and encouragement. Add a real question sticker if the campaign is implemented.
Week 3	Publish the feature-focused post and distribute the digital leaflet to explain the proposed product.
Week 4	Repeat the participation invitation around 8 March and review responses. Reuse responses only with consent.

Measures of achievement

A proposed target is 30 voluntary responses over four weeks. The review would count relevant replies and hashtag contributions, record post reach and engagement where platform analytics allow, and note genuine product enquiries. These are planning measures, not actual results. Without baseline account data or an approved media budget, reach and sales are not guaranteed.

Question 2(b)

Recommend suitable software for the poster, social posts and digital leaflet. Explain its purpose, how AI supports the work, and how generated content is checked for correctness, suitability and safe use.

Adobe Photoshop

Adobe Photoshop is the main selected design application. It supports arranging product imagery, adjusting backgrounds, adding text and adapting compositions for the poster, social posts and leaflet. Separate text layers allow wording and placement to be revised. The supplied poster screenshot visibly includes text layers for the campaign wording. Other supplied screenshots show the Story and Facebook design open in Photoshop.

Editable PSD files retain the design layers, while PNG or JPEG exports support digital presentation. A leaflet PDF preserves its layout. Layer masks and guides are suitable for further development, but I do not claim every Photoshop technique was used.

Zoom for recording and CapCut for editing

I plan to record my individual 5–7-minute video pitch using Zoom. Screen sharing will allow me to display the poster, three social posts and leaflet while my camera and microphone record my own appearance and voice. Before recording, I will check the sound, camera framing and readability of the shared designs.

I will use CapCut to edit the recording. It will help me trim mistakes and long pauses, arrange the material clearly, adjust audio levels and add short labels or captions where useful. I will keep the final duration within 5–7 minutes. Editing will support my own presentation rather than replacing it with an AI avatar or generated voice.

Microsoft Word for assessment preparation

How AI supported the work

I used AI to explore campaign ideas, generate product imagery and develop initial promotional layouts and wording. An AI image-generation tool produced the product and campaign starting visuals. The artwork does not contain disclosure labels, but its origin is acknowledged here. The Ambition Mini Tote is a fictional proposal; the original company screenshots remain the evidence of existing corporate identity.

Checking correctness suitability and safety

Company claims must be compared with the supplied company evidence. Proposed features must be described as proposals rather than verified specifications. Check the bag clasp, cardholder and goal card across the five designs for consistency. Proofread all wording, inspect small text at its intended display size and check that the intended action is clear.

Do not invent availability, prices, donations, environmental benefits or sales results. Do not collect private goals unnecessarily or reuse audience responses without consent. Keep original files and genuine revision screenshots. My process evidence identifies what is visible in Photoshop without claiming that every part of the generated starting artwork was manually created.

SECTION B — Question 1(a)

Create one promotional poster introducing the product or service, linked to the celebration, with the key message and a call to action.

The poster introduces the proposed product with the headline Carry Your Ambition. The bag, cardholder, and goal card link the product to the message. International Women's Day and 8 March identify the occasion. The short call to action, Share Your Ambition, invites participation, supported by the campaign hashtag. The large image and limited copy are intended for quick reading.

Question 1(b) — Instagram feed introduction

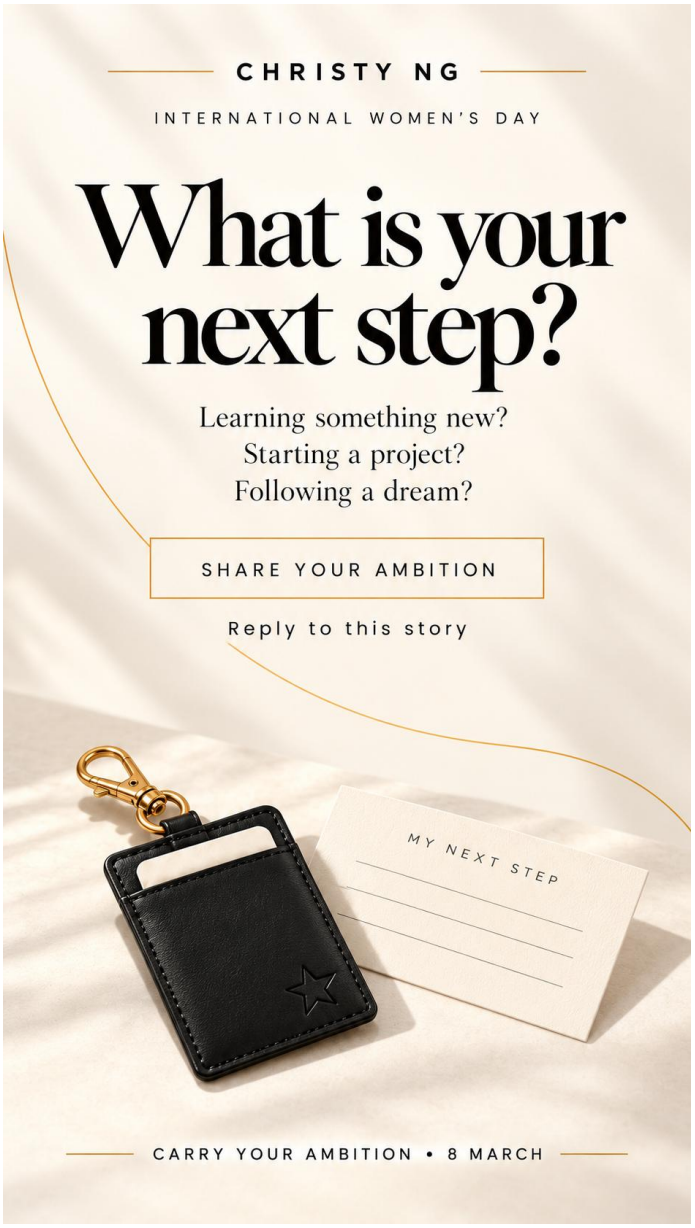

Create three coordinated social media posts. Adapt each post to its message, purpose and intended platform while maintaining a consistent identity.

Meet your next chapter introduces the proposed bag through a large product image and short supporting message. The product name is clearly displayed. Share your next step directs viewers towards the same participation action used across the campaign. The portrait layout gives the headline and bag room in the feed.

Question 1(b) — Instagram Story engagement

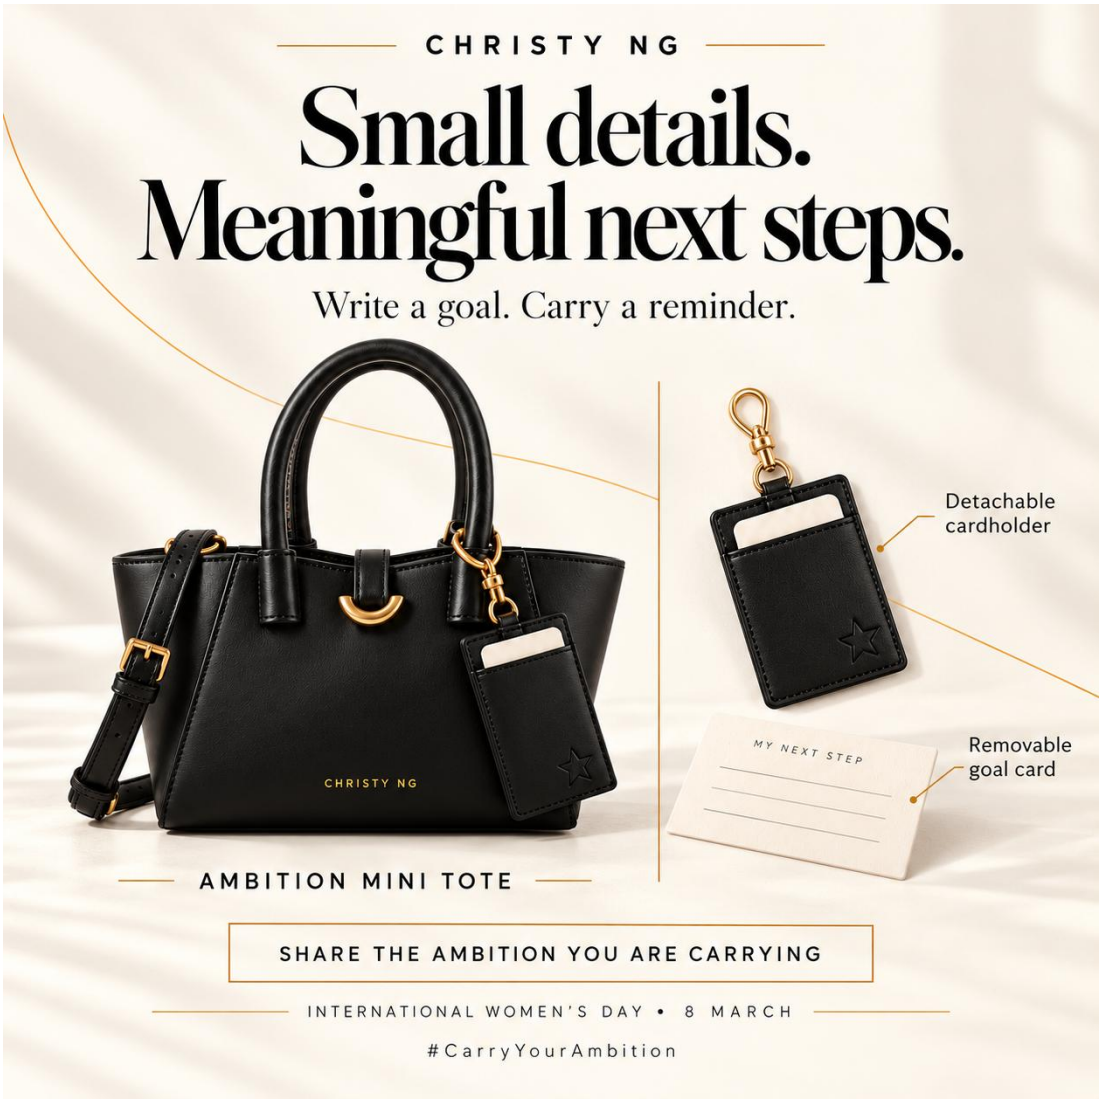

Create three coordinated social media posts. Adapt each post to its message, purpose and intended platform while maintaining a consistent identity.

What is your next step? Give the audience a direct question. Examples such as learning something new help viewers understand the prompt. The cardholder and goal card reinforce the product connection without repeating the full-bag composition. The response box is part of the static artwork; it is not interactive. A real Story question sticker would be added if implemented.

Question 1(b) — Facebook product details

Create three coordinated social media posts. Adapt each post to its message, purpose and intended platform while maintaining a consistent identity.

The square design gives more space to the detachable cardholder and removable goal card. The headline: Small details. Meaningful next steps connect the proposed features to the campaign message. Labels explain the features, while the call to action invites viewers to share an ambition. It provides information rather than repeating the introduction or Story question.

Question 1(c)

Create a digital leaflet or brochure with more detailed product information, its connection to the celebration and an appropriate call to action.

The leaflet explains the proposed tote, cardholder, and goal card in separate sections. It describes the celebration connection and gives three participation steps: write a goal, keep a reminder, and share voluntarily. The cream background, black typography, and gold details maintain campaign consistency. The Share Your Next Step action and hashtag make the intended response clear.

Question 1(d)

Explain two important design choices, their purpose, support for the message, audience and organisation, and adaptations across formats. Discuss a limitation or alternative and explain the final selection.

Choice 1: Cream, black and gold

Cream allows the black bag to stand out, while black text provides contrast for reading. Restrained gold accents connect with the product hardware. The palette relates to the neutral backgrounds and warm presentation in the company evidence. It supports an elegant fashion appearance for the selected audience without adding unnecessary visual clutter.

On the poster, colour separation directs attention to the main bag and headline. In the social posts, the repeated palette helps identify the campaign despite different layouts. In the leaflet, gold rules and section divisions organise longer information. Thin gold lines can become faint on small screens, so important wording remains black. Final exports should be checked at their intended viewing size.

Choice 2: Typography and the goal card focus

Large serif headlines attract attention and provide a consistent editorial appearance. Simpler supporting text is used for actions and labels. The bag introduces the accessory, while the cardholder and goal card explain what distinguishes this proposal. The goal card links the product to recognising ambitions rather than offering only an International Women's Day greeting.

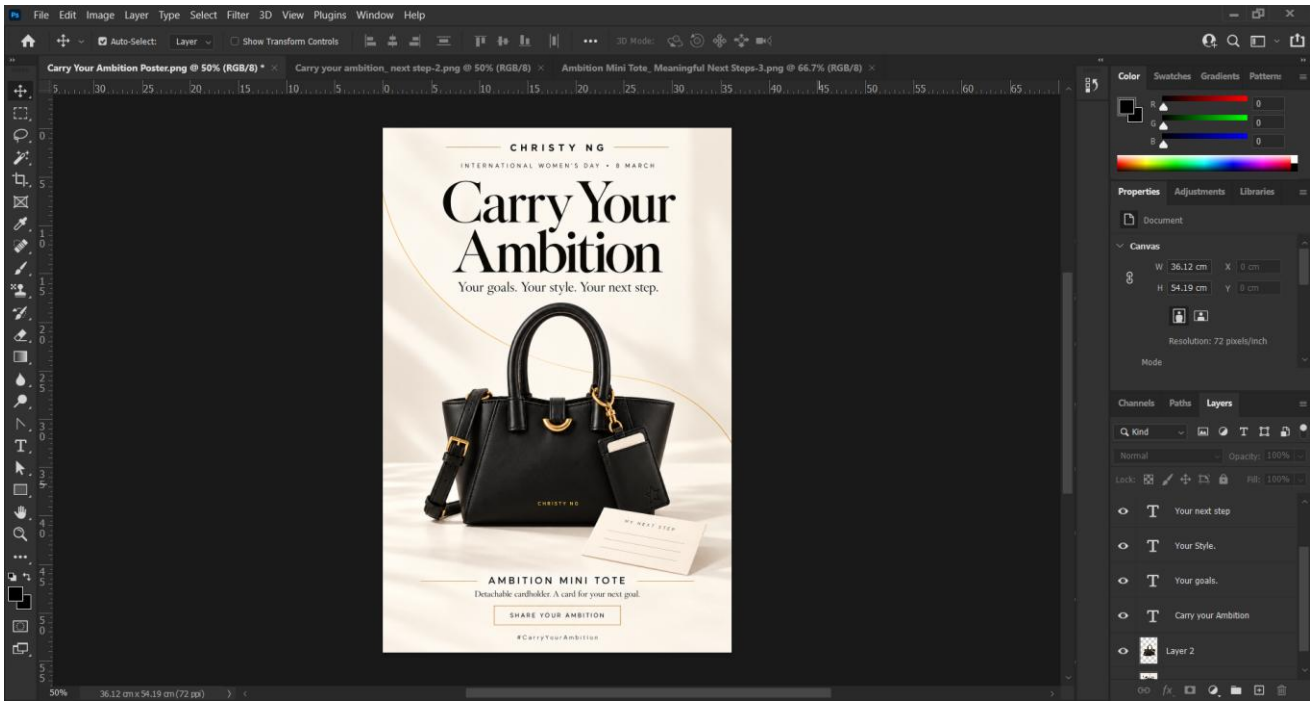

The poster uses the full bag and a short slogan. The feed introduction uses a different headline and product arrangement. The Story prioritises a question and shows the cardholder with the goal card. The Facebook design uses labelled details. The leaflet combines images, feature explanations and participation steps. Each format therefore contributes a different level of information.

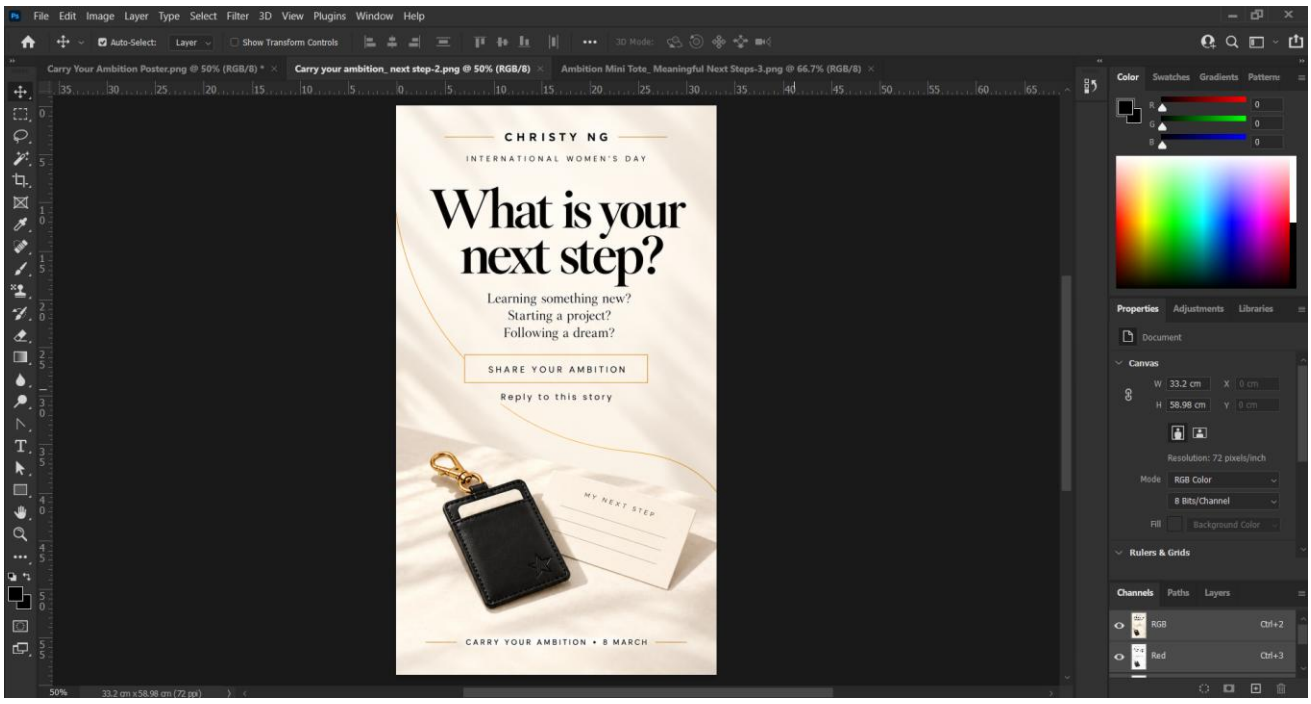

Limitation and final design rationale

A major limitation is that the product is an untested concept. The cardholder's security, usability, production cost and audience appeal have not been validated. Management would need a prototype and user feedback before approval for manufacture. The campaign must also avoid implying that a purchase creates empowerment or equality.

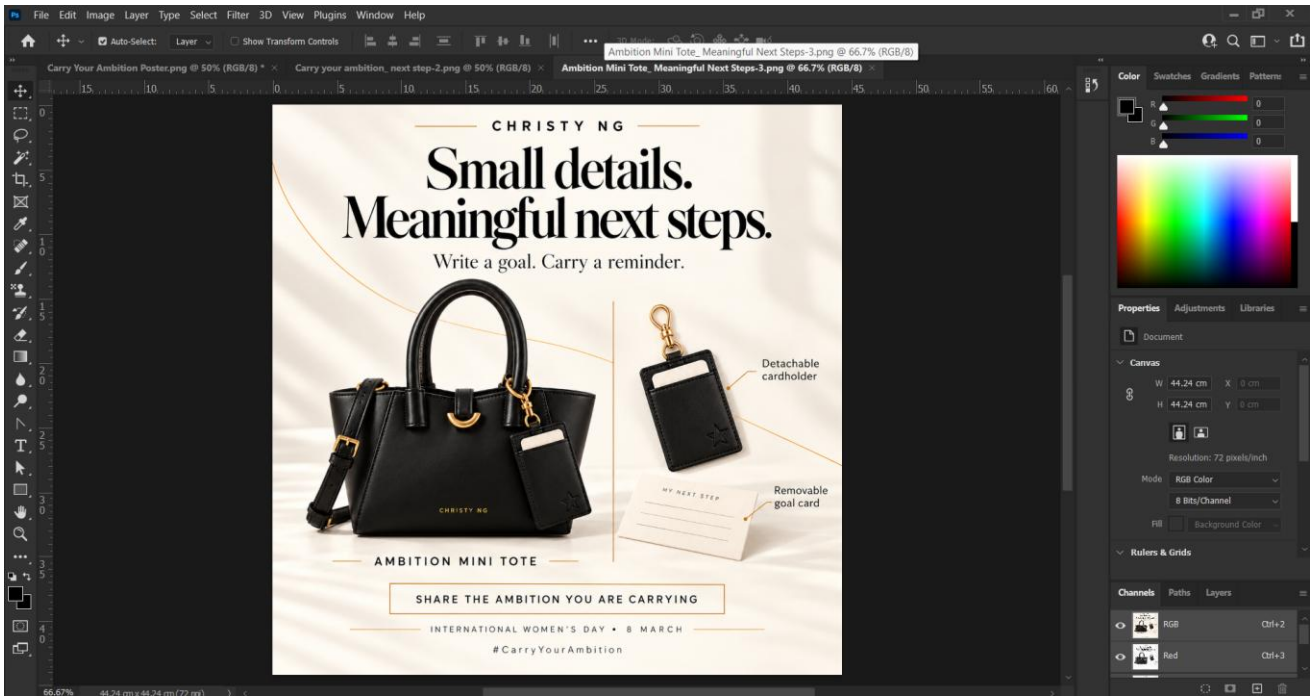

The selected approach gives the product a clear focus and a recognisable connection to the celebration. I chose this direction because the goal card makes the ambition message visible and the coordinated palette connects all five materials. Text embedded in generated images can limit flexibility, while separate text layers support later correction. The poster screenshot shows this editable text structure in Photoshop.

Figures 11 and 12 show the relevant files in Photoshop.

Question 2 — Individual Video Pitch

Prepare a 5–7-minute individual pitch to the organisation's management team. Introduce the campaign, display all materials, explain two design choices and the software and AI tools, discuss one limitation or risk, and end with reasons for approval.

I will use the following six-minute outline as speaking prompts, record using Zoom and edit the recording using CapCut. The assessment requires the student to appear, use their own voice and explain the campaign in their own words, rather than mainly reading a script. Display the poster, all three social designs and the leaflet clearly. The video will be submitted separately from these written answers.

Time	Speaking points and visual
0:00–0:40	Introduce myself and address the management team. Identify Christy Ng and explain the evidence used to understand its visual identity.
0:40–1:25	Show the Ambition Mini Tote concept. Explain the proposed cardholder and goal card. Identify International Women's Day and distinguish this proposal from an existing company product.
1:25–2:10	Explain the audience, objective, slogan, supporting message and Share Your Next Step action. Describe the four-week plan and proposed response target.
2:10–3:35	Display the poster, Instagram introduction, Story and Facebook feature post. Explain each material's purpose and how the layouts differ.
3:35–4:15	Display the leaflet. Explain why it contains more product and celebration information and how readers can participate.
4:15–5:10	Explain two choices: colour identity and typography with product-detail focus. Identify the software actually used, AI assistance and personal revisions.
5:10–6:00	State one risk, such as untested product usability or cost. Recommend prototyping and audience feedback. End by explaining why management should approve further development of this coherent, participatory proposal.

Closing argument to develop in your own words

The proposal gives the organisation a coordinated accessory concept, a recognisable visual identity and an audience action linked to International Women's Day. Approval should first support further design development and testing. Production or sales should follow only after feasibility and customer response are assessed.

Assessment and development records

COMM1501 final-assessment brief and question screenshots supplied by the student, including the pasted wording of Section A Questions 2(a) and 2(b). The supplied cover-page image was used as the layout reference; its old assignment title, date and signature were not reused.

Three student-supplied Adobe Photoshop screenshots: image(2).png, image(3).png and image(4).png. The assessment limits process claims to what these screenshots visibly support.

AI acknowledgement

ChatGPT supported campaign planning options, wording and assessment assembly. An AI image-generation tool created the Ambition Mini Tote concept board and the five campaign starting visuals. The three company screenshots were supplied by the student and are not generated evidence. The campaign artwork is presented without disclosure labels for a clean visual layout; acknowledgement is retained in this assessment.

I acknowledge AI assistance with the initial product and campaign visuals and written support. I used Photoshop to work with the artwork, and my supplied screenshots document that stage. I remain responsible for checking the content and explaining my design decisions.
